Production considerations in the age of COVID-19:

During these unprecedented times, the landscape of television and film production in Turkey and the rest of the world is changing as the industry tries to adapt to the new dynamic. In this framework, both the government and private sector players in Turkey (i.e. associations, digital platforms, unions etc.) are making an effort to support the continuation of production with adequate health and safety measures.

Since the situation is changing and evolving on an almost daily basis, we recommend reviewing the rules applicable to the jurisdiction you will be producing in.

Why produce in Turkey?

Turkey stands out as a country that is increasingly recognized in the global film, television and interactive digital media market. Turkey is not only a huge film market – with more than 2,800 cinema screens across 82 cities, and with locally-made films making up more than half of the market – but also recognition of Turkish movies in international film festivals has increased greatly over the past years. Turkey has also become one of the world's biggest exporters of TV series, exporting to more than 140 countries across several continents. Indeed, Turkey is considered one of the main players for over-the-top platform productions (with new series and films produced for leading new generation platforms such as Netflix).

The increasing growth in audio-visual production is attributable to the country's diverse landscapes and climates, its authentic culture, favorable economic factors, including low real estate rental costs and production costs, the advantageous exchange rate, as well as government tax incentives and funding offered mainly by the Ministry of Culture and Tourism and the Ministry of Industry and Technology.

We know the advantages of audio-visual production in Turkey, including the various tax incentives and funding policies attached to producing in Turkey. Our guide to incentive and support schemes for Turkish film, television and interactive digital media services provides an overview of some of the available incentives and funding policies.

This guide aims to provide a general framework to possible stakeholders in relation to the Turkish film, television and interactive digital media production industry. In this regard, the guide seeks to explain the current situation through key statistics and prominent Turkish film productions as well as provides detailed information in relation to government incentive schemes and supports applicable for various projects in the industry. The information provided in this edition is current as of June 2020.

Dynamics of the film industry

The film industry differentiates itself from the classic goods and services industries since the film content, in other words the product, does not originate from a direct need of the consumers, there is no direct relation between the final price of the product and the demand, and cost is not a determining factor in the pricing¹.

The operating chain of the industry consists of film production, distribution and theater operation businesses.

The Turkish production landscape is traditionally made up of a large number of small production companies and it is considered to be rather fragmented. The production companies often produce only one movie every couple of years². Due to the large number of producers in the industry, many professional associations were established in order to protect the common interests of Turkish film producers³. Beşiktaş Culture Center (BKM), a Turkish entertainment conglomerate, is considered one of the leading producers in the market. BKM produced three of the top 10 grossing movies at the Turkish box office in 2018; it is followed by Dijital Sanatlar, the producer of 2018's top-ranking movie, Müslüm, and TAFF Pictures⁴.

While such leading production firms can fund their projects without public funding and produce big-budget blockbuster or genre/mid-range films, most of the local producers may have limited resources in terms of expected audience or capital. In order to support these smaller-scale local producers, public funds and several international funds are utilized as sources⁵.

Turkish film distribution practice differs from the general practice in Europe as the screen printing and advertisement costs of the films are borne by the producers, not the distributors. This model is often referred to as the "rent-a-distributor model" and in this model, the distributors carry a rather small portion of the financial risk, serving mainly as an intermediary, playing a booking and collection role in the supply chain. Distributors either pay minimum guarantees or enter into pre-sale agreements⁶.

Accordingly, at the distribution level, the market is very dynamic. Indeed, there are numerous players that have entered and also left the market in the last decade. Having said that, the industry is still concentrated in terms of shares of total revenue and audience. In fact, the shares won by the top three distributors between 2016 – 2018 (namely MARS, UIP and Warner Bros) were reported as 76%, 79% and 74% respectively⁷.

At the screening level, the film industry started in theaters set up in public spaces and individual buildings. With time, consumers' tastes changed and the viewing spaces moved to malls from individual buildings.

While the portion of movie theaters in malls were reported to be 71.4% of all the theaters in 2014, this number reached 80% by 2018⁸. Currently, the movie theaters in malls are mostly operated by large-scale companies, whereas small-scale theater operators are located in individual buildings. In this regard, MARS which operates in 53 cities, 189 locations and has 1,413 screens – is the sector leader in terms of screens. Upon acquiring AFM in 2011, MARS became a very significant player in the sector and later it was acquired by CJ CGV in 2016. Upon the establishment of its distribution department, MARS became an important player also at the distribution level of the industry.

As of 2019, there are 447 movie theatres in Turkey where 2,778 cinema screens hold a capacity of 323,379 seats. Most of these theaters are in the Marmara region (168 movie theaters), which is followed by the Aegean region (63 movie theaters). When the analysis is made on a city basis, Istanbul is the leading city with 106 movie theaters and 814 screens, whereas the capital Ankara comes second with 27 movie theaters and 232 screens¹.

On the other hand, even before the COVID-19 pandemic, research revealed that the Turkish audience prefers watching movies at home rather than going to the movie theaters. Although, when compared to Europe, the penetration of digital screens in Turkey progressed relatively slow at the beginning of the 2000s², with the introduction of over-the-top streaming media there was a fast adoption of digital screens. In fact, in 2019 Turkey registered a decrease in cinema attendance, while EU cinema attendance increased by 5.5%³. While the audience adopted to the change in the industry rather quickly, the perks of digitalization is highly debated at the supply side of the industry. Acting as a pioneer, BKM released its film Organize İşler 2: Sazan Sarmalı on Netflix two weeks after its appearance in the theatres. This was harshly criticized by the producers' associations as an act that will severely damage the development of the entire sector⁴.

Although there may be traditional resistance to the changes in the industry, it becomes clearer each day that the old-fashioned ways are not sufficient for the current needs of the industry. Therefore, the industry started to push for legal changes to meet its new demands. In the past, producers' revenue was determined by a revenue share model, where half of the revenue was shared with the movie theaters. Intermediary distributors collected the producers' share of the revenue and paid the producers after deducting their commissions, which could vary between 2% to 10% of the revenue generated. Due to this revenue-sharing model, the producers were highly influenced by the pricing models adopted by the movie theaters, since they were not able to track the total revenue or the number of viewers.

In order to meet the demands of the producers, rooting from the problems of the above-mentioned revenue-sharing model, an amendment was introduced in January 2019 to the Act No. 5224 on Evaluation, Classification and Support of Cinema Films (Turkish Cinema Act). Under this amendment, the movie theaters were restricted to the extent that they could apply promotions to ticket prices, unless such promotions are subject to agreements between the producers and distributors of such films.

Additionally, the movie theaters became obliged to operate a specific hardware and software determined by the Ministry of Culture and Tourism which will allow the ministry to track the number of film screenings accurately.

Moreover, the legislative system is currently adapting to the evolution of the Internet and changes in the viewer information and entertainment landscapes. With the expansion of the broadcasters to online streaming and the entry of new players (i.e. online content providers, streaming platforms) into the broadcasting market, the Radio and Television Supreme Council ("RTSC") regulator recently amended its regulation on broadcast services. Accordingly, the platform operators and media service providers, which broadcast radio, television and on-demand contents over the Internet, are also patrolled by the RTSC and must obtain specific authorization/licenses. These amendments may serve as a stepping stone for more changes on the digital front.

Demand trends

In 2019, Turkish cinema experienced a downfall in the number of viewers by 15.4%. As opposed to the 70.4 million tickets sold in 2018, in 2019 only 59.4 million tickets were sold. This fall in demand was also associated with the amendment to the Turkish Cinema Act, since many producers delayed the release of their films until the enactment of the amendment. This close link between supply and demand is also evident from the fact that 24.1 million of the total 59.4 million tickets were sold only in the last quarter of 2019, following the amendment to the Turkish Cinema Act.

Local films held a 56.7% market share in Turkey in 2019 as compared to the UK and France average of 40-45% in recent years.

It is reported that Turkish films were watched by 33.8 million viewers, which corresponds to a 56.7% market share. As for foreign films, this number was reported as 25.7 million viewers. While the market share of local films are in the 40-45% band in the UK and in France, Turkish films have held a market share above 53% for the last seven years.

Films classified for young viewers led the market in 2019 with 13+ films holding 24% in the market and 7+ films holding 20%. The third group reported was the general viewer films, which held a 15% share.

As for the digital platforms, the number of users is reported as 9.74 million and this is expected to show an increasing trend. The number of users in the over-the-top streaming segment is expected to amount to 13.4 million by 2024. BluTV comes first in the market with a 55% user share, followed by Netflix (20%) and Youtube (10%). Demographics of the 2019 users show a dynamic and young audience for the over-the-top streaming segment, with 38.5% of the audience being between 25-34 years old and 19.3% of the audience between 18-14 years old¹.

Recent productions

Turkish film, television and interactive digital media market has shown a rapid evolution especially in terms of digitalization in the last couple of years. As a result of the increasing global demand in the digital platforms, Turkish producers started to create contents for these new media (such as Netflix, puhutv, BluTV) while also contributing to the traditional channels.

Several examples of recent productions include:

- Ayla – 2017: Ayla, a film based on a true story, was released in 2017 and was presented the Best Director of Editing Award in Cape Town International Film Festival and the Best Picture Award at the Asia International Film Festival. Ayla was also a candidate for nomination for the Oscars.

- Atiye (the Gift) – 2019: Atiye is the second Turkish production made for Netflix. Although it was released on December 2019, the show was reported as number one in the list of most watched Netflix shows in Turkey in 2019. The show is still ongoing.
- Rise of Empires: Ottoman – 2020: Rise of Empires Ottoman is the first Turkish historical docu-drama aired on Netflix.

Key production and post-production incentives

The enactment of the Turkish Cinema Act in 2004 marked the beginning of a significant era for Turkish cinema. With this Act, the international evaluation and classification system was adopted in the audio-visual production sector and, starting with the enactment of the Act, support provided to feature films increased considerably. This increased the diversity of nationally produced films, which was reflected positively in box office revenues and the increased market share of national films.

Within the scope of the Turkish Cinema Act, the Ministry of Culture and Tourism's General Directorate of Cinema runs certain incentives and funding programs for the film sector. The Incentive Commission, which is made up of representatives from the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and the Turkish authors', performers', and producers' associations, decides on the incentives and support. They meet at least once every three months to decide on the specific requirements of an incentive scheme.

The types of projects that may benefit from the said incentives and funding programs are listed below:

- Project development
- Animation movie production
- Short film production
- Scenario and dialogue writing
- Local film screening
- First feature-length film production
- Feature-length film production
- Distribution and marketing
- Joint production

- Post-shooting
- Documentary production

Relevant stakeholders may apply to the incentive schemes issued by the Incentive Commission via the e-government website (e-devlet). Once an application is made, the Incentive Commission evaluates each application. Subsequent to evaluation of the applications, the Incentive Commission makes a decision, which is published on its website. The decision includes the list of audio-visual productions that benefit from the support, alongside applicable incentive amounts. The Commission also publishes the list of audio-visual products that fail to benefit from the incentive schemes.

Overall, the production support of the Commission may not exceed 50% of the total costs; whereas post-production support of the Commission may not exceed 30% of the total costs.

Detailed information in relation to eligibility requirements and application process for the relevant incentive/funding programs are listed in the subsequent sections.

We understand the dynamics of the ever-changing media industry and closely monitor developments in the media industry.

In Turkey, our team, made up of members of different practice groups (including the Corporate, Regulation and Public Policy & Competition and Litigation) engages in a wide range of diverse services, including but not limited to the following:

- Strategic legal advice in relation to risk mitigating and capitalization matters linked to evolving trends in the media marketplace;
- M&A, competition and regulatory advice on transactional matters, such as acquisition and sale of different media outlets/businesses (i.e. films, television, music, publishing, digital media assets or a sports team), starting from the negotiation stage until the closing of the transaction, inclusive of handling all regulatory approval processes;
- Legal assistance to advertising and media investment agencies in drafting and negotiating advertising, media buying and planning, barter, content production, inventory licensing contracts, search engine marketing and search engine optimization services, social media management, digital performance marketing, and behavioral advertising services contracts;
- Corporate and regulatory advice in relation to all matters such as launching of a television or internet channel, participating in a sports venue/real estate development,
- Regulatory and competition compliance advice on distribution and financing of different media outlets/businesses (i.e. licensing and broadcasting rights, content production etc.),
- Regulatory and competition compliance advice on all IP-related issues, as well as data protection and data privacy issues;

- Cooperation with regulatory bodies and participation in drafting/amendments to relevant media regulations, such as the Radio and Television Supreme Council's recently enacted Regulation on Internet Broadcasting; as well as proceedings before regulatory bodies;
- Litigation, arbitration or mediation advice, especially in relation to copyright, trademark or licensing disputes via examination of all the technical details of each case, familiarization with the specifics of each case and development of the strategies based on identification of ways to avoid disputes, while protecting the rights of the clients and the exhaustion of all possibilities to enforce the claims of the clients in courts or in arbitration in case a dispute is unavoidable.

The team is acclaimed for being the only one consisting of lawyers as well as regulatory experts and specialist economists. This allows us to adopt a versatile approach, determine multidiscipline strategies with a legal/commercial perspective, whilst examining the effects of actual and potential sector-specific regulations on our clients' business, and drafting strategic action plans based on a game theory approach.
